Cheese Please

Back during the Big Freeze of 2010, myself (a cheese fiend) and Aisling Kennedy (a chocoholic) had a competition to see who could eat the most of their chosen vice in 60 seconds. Timed by Áine, broken into teeny squares and witnessed by the entire office, I strode to victory as Aisling struggled to eat enough Maltesers to beat me. There is talk of a rematch and we're currently both trying to decide what brands we'll use next time. The arrival of some Cooleeney Farm Cheese on my desk a few weeks ago made the decision for me. Not only is it Irish, made as it is in Tipperary, it's also a family run business and more importantly absolutely delicious and comes in an array of flavours, including Brie with Garlic and the delicious Gournamona, a goat's cheese with a hint of mushrooms. Bring it on Kennedy!
